

AMONG US MORTALS

"PEOPLE YOU SELDOM MEET"

By RICHARD VINCENT CULTER

Copyright, 1922, by F. T. Feltman, Inc.
Trade Mark Reg. U. S. Patent Office

we have one of the rarest birds in the country—the man
who has bought the
same make of automobile twice. Just what his name
address would
be worth for advertising purposes to
the makers of this popular car. It's sworn secret.

Another rare specimen is the person over forty who approves of the Younger Generation. This portrait had to be a pure guess for we never met one.

Right at the top of the page in the place of honor we place this Dodo Bird—the woman who is satisfied with her figure, doesn't long to be fatter or slimmer, taller or shorter, and whose hair is just the right shade. Very rare, very rare!

Exhibit number four is also quite exceptional—an airplane passenger who actually admits, at the end of his first flight, that he was nearly scared to death.

The bather who doesn't remark, after the first plunge—"Oh, it isn't cold after you get in." Ever meet one? Neither did we!

You have probably met a lot of people who say they take a cold shower every single morning, weather and season notwithstanding, but who really don't do it at all. But here is a chap who actually takes one and doesn't brag about it.

Here is where your credulity gets a terrible strain—a woman who drank before Prohibition, but who doesn't drink now. We never have met such a case but we are assured on good authority that one really exists.

Sol Gellieber, of Snappy Fillums, Inc., is in danger of a stroke of apoplexy and will be lucky if he lives through it. He has stumbled across the first instance in history of a girl who doesn't think she would make a good movie actress.

He doesn't look exceptional, but he is. This golfer admits he is playing "off his game" when his score is good and "on his game" when he shoots around one hundred and twenty.